

Could you help future doctors learn about autism?

"The students were brilliant and so interested... It's a great programme, we are very happy that we got involved."

We are looking for families in Brighton & Hove to take part in an innovative education programme to teach medical students about autism.

About Time for Autism

Time for Autism is a ground-breaking education programme that aims to transform healthcare for autistic people by increasing the knowledge and understanding of medical students.

The project is a collaboration between Brighton and Sussex Medical School, local families, Sussex Community NHS Foundation Trust, local charities and voluntary groups.

How you can get involved

We are looking for families in Brighton & Hove and Sussex* to take part in this innovative education programme designed to teach medical students about autism.

Each family will be paired with two students from Brighton and Sussex Medical School who will visit them at home three times over one academic year.

This is an exciting opportunity for autistic children and young people, and their families, to share experiences and expertise with medical students in order to help them provide better care for autistic people in the future.

If you would like to know more, please contact:
Alison Smith, Time for Autism Development
Manager

T: 07717 450954

E: timeforautism@bsms.ac.uk

W: bsms.ac.uk/time-for-autism

 within one hour of Brighton by car or public transport*

SCAN ME

